Maggie Little counsels hospitals, health systems, physician practice groups, and health care providers on the full spectrum of healthcare transactional, regulatory, and operational issues. Within the healthcare industry, Maggie focuses her practice on health care transactional matters, including physician and advanced practice provider employment arrangements, acquisitions and joint ventures, and complex clinical partnerships and affiliations; compliance and regulatory affairs, including licensure, scope of practice, and fraud and abuse matters; and in-house counsel services for providers and health system leadership. She advises clients on clinical and operational policies and procedures, business development and strategic initiatives, and negotiates complex health system contracting matters.

Maggie began her legal career at Krieg DeVault and has returned to the firm after her tenure as legal counsel to a large Indiana health system. Drawing on her in-house experience, Maggie partners with clinical, compliance, and administrative teams to operationalize regulatory guidance, address risk management considerations, and support strategic initiatives across complex care settings.
